I-M Fashion

AFTERNOON IN A LONDON TOWNHOUSE

Singers Françoise Hardy and Jane Birkin were the poster girls of the Swinging Sixties and Bohemian Seventies. Cool Parisian IT-girls, they created a look that was far removed from the tailored couture-style fashions of a previous generation. Their undone, androgynous insouciance established a carefree-careless attitude to fashion that is still emulated by young French women today, dressed in their leather jackets, miniskirts and jeans.

With their sharp cheekbones, long wavy hair and androgynous charm, these teen style icons were the epitome of cool in the London baby-boom look of the period. They earned their street-cred amongst the youth by wearing short skirts, long coats, flared pants and boots by Guy and Saint Laurent, Le Smoking tuxedos and Paco Rabanne's simple mid-dresses after dark. The mantra was 'never to look "dressed"' and so a man's cotton shirt with a sequined collar, a shirred tunic-style party dress, feather-trimmed grommets by leather boots, became the short-hand for their image. Today, that look remains very relevant, with designers inspired by the sequins, feathers and mind-basses of the Sixties and the lush richly textured velvet and brocade trousseau.
