I-M Fashion

AFTERNOON IN A
LONDON TOWNHOUSE

Singers Françoise Hardy and Jane Birkin were the poster girls of the Swinging Sixties and Bohemian Seventies. Cool Parisian IT-girls, they created a look that was far removed from the tailored couture-style fashions of a previous generation. Their undone, androgynous insouciance established a carefree-careless attitude to fashion that is still emulated by young French women today, dressed in their leather jackets, mini-skirts and jeans.

With their sharp cheekbones, long unkempt hair and androgynous charm, these two style icons were the antithesis of the sexed-up Bardot baby-doll look of the period. They earned their street-cred amongst the youth by wearing short skirts, long coats, flared pants and berets by day and Saint Laurent Le Smoking tuxedos and Paco Rabanne sequin minidresses after dark. The mantra was never to look "dressed" and so a man's cotton shirt with a sequined skirt, a shirtless tuxedo, or a paisley dress feather-trimmed grounded by leather boots, became the short-hand for their image. Today, that look remains very relevant, with designers inspired by the sequins, feathers and minidresses of the Sixties and the lush richly coloured velvet and brocade trouser
